The Study: Clinical assessments can only offer a snapshot of daily life with Parkinson's Disease, while wearable devices can offer immensely more information that can improve our understanding of this disease. With recent advancements in technology, we are now able to use watch-like devices to more effectively measure the symptoms of Parkinson's Disease outside of the doctor's office. This study requires four visits to the lab (approx. 1-2 hours each) and two, one-week data collection intervals in the home.

We need your help to further our understanding of these devices and revolutionize the way we conduct Parkinson's research.
