Parkinson's Awareness Month

Spring is finally here and April is Parkinson's awareness month! This is our time to spread the word about Parkinson's, raise funds for research, programs, and services, and encourage each other to get involved. There is no shortage of events for people of all interests and abilities! Prefer to kick-back and relax? Join us for a low-key educational program; learn about new developments in Parkinson's, have lunch on us, and meet some wonderful people. Nightlife more your style? Plan a date night, put on your dazzling duds, and join us for our annual Magic of Hope Auction on May 9th. We promise good food, good wine, and lots of fun and excitement! Like a good challenge? Lace up those tennis shoes, create a team, and compete against others in the annual Adventure Race scavenger hunt in Ballard on May 30th. Favor staying behind the scenes? Volunteer with us, and help us bring programs and services to even more people with PD this spring. Whatever your style, make a commitment this April to get involved in a way that is meaningful to you.

For the most up-to-date info on upcoming events, check out the Events Calendar on our website at www.waparkinsons.org or give us a call, we love to hear from you!

Until next time!

RESEARCH CORNER

THE WASHINGTON STATE PARKINSON DISEASE Registry (WPDR) connects people with Parkinson disease to the research community. The registry is a database of individuals with PD and healthy controls that are interested in participating in, or learning about, local research trials. WPDR is currently looking for individuals to participate in the following studies:

Technology Use for People with Parkinson Disease

The University of Washington Department of Rehabilitation Medicine is conducting a study examining how people with PD use technology. The study consists of a short survey followed by a 1-hour focus group discussing how you use technology and brainstorming problems that need to be resolved. You may qualify for this study is you have PD and are between 40-90 years of age, and experience tremors on a daily basis. This study requires travel to the University of Washington. However, there is free parking and a $40 Amazon gift card is offered as compensation for participation.

Glutathione in Parkinson Disease

Research has found that glutathione is an important nutrient for brain function, and that a loss of glutathione has been implicated in PD. Dr. Laurie Mischley with Bastyr Universiy is conducting a study to determine if the intranasal administration of glutathione has an effect on symptoms of PD. This study consists of five 1-hour study visits over the course of four months at Bastyr University in Kenmore, WA. Study visits will include questionnaires, physical measurements, and collection of blood and urine samples. A small subset of participants may be asked to undergo two optional MRI's. You may qualify for this study if you have been diagnosed with PD in the last 10 years, and have been stable with your medications for the past 30 days. Participants will be reimbursed $10 per study visit for time and transportation costs and $100 for each MRI If applicable.

If you are interested in joining the registry, or learning about upcoming research trials contact the WPDR at 206.277.6080 or www.registerparkinsons.org

The Truth Behind Alcohol and Marijuana Use in Parkinson Disease

Ali Samii, MD

THIS ARTICLE IS A BRIEF overview of the potential benefits and harms of alcohol and marijuana use in patients with Parkinson disease (PD). A comprehensive initial consultation in most clinics includes a detailed "social history". Obtaining a "social history" usually involves asking patients about their habits such as tobacco, alcohol, and drug use (including recreational and medicinal use of cannabis).

The beneficial effects of light alcohol consumption (1-2 beverages daily) in reducing the risk of cardiovascular disease such as heart attacks and strokes are well established. However, the beneficial effects of alcohol in PD are less known. Some studies have found a slight reduction in the risk of developing PD with alcohol consumption while others have not. A recent review study suggests that alcohol consumption may slightly reduce the risk of developing PD.

Dr. John Peacock, a neurologist in Reno,

NV, summarized the potential beneficial effects of alcohol (specifically ethanol) on dopaminergic neurons (neurons that produce dopamine.) According to a study performed on rats, low doses of ethanol increased the firing rate of dopaminergic neurons by 30- 80%. Additionally, resveratrol, an antioxidant found in red wine is found to be potentially neuro-protective and anti-inflammatory.

However, alcohol certainly has its drawbacks. The worldwide prevalence of alcoholism approaches 100 million persons based on a large 2010 study. According to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA), up to 25% of adults in the US report either having alcohol-related problems or drinking patterns that put them at risk for developing problems. In a study published in 2003, alcohol use and Parkinson disease were each significant independent risk factors for falls leading to hospitalizations in patients aged 65 and older. In another study specific to PD; duration and severity of PD symptoms, freezing of gait, involuntary movements, postural instability, orthostatic hypotension (low standing blood pressure), and daily intake of alcohol were all associated with increased risk of falls in PD patients.

Now, what about marijuana (also known as cannabis)? The first report on the medicinal use of cannabis was published in 1843 in Britain. In the United States, 23 states and the District of Columbia now allow medical marijuana use, but only Washington and Colorado allow recreational use. A recent paper reviewed the potential benefits of cannabis in movement disorders, including theoretical neuro-protective effects in PD. However, large controlled studies have not been done in PD and the benefits of marijuana use are unclear. A small study of 21

PD patients found some benefit in quality of life measures in those who used high dose cannabidiol (one of dozens of active cannabinoids identified in cannabis.)

A larger, more comprehensive effort was made by the American Academy of Neurology to look at all previously published studies on medical marijuana use in selected neurologic disorders. After a systematic review, they made several conclusions:

- For spasticity (continuously tight, or stiff muscles) oral cannabis extract (OCE) is effective, and nabiximols and tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) are probably effective, for reducing symptoms.
- For painful spasms (including spasticityrelated pain, but excluding neuropathic pain), OCE is effective, and THC and nabiximols are probably effective.
- For urinary urgency and frequency, nabiximols is probably effective, but THC and OCE are probably ineffective for reducing bladder complaints.
- For tremor, THC and OCE are probably ineffective and nabiximols is possibly ineffective.

• For treating levodopa-induced dyskinesia (squirmy involuntary movements) in patients with Parkinson disease, oral cannabinoids are of "unknown efficacy".

The authors emphasized that the risks and benefits of medical marijuana should be weighed carefully. Risk of serious adverse psychopathologic effects was nearly 1%.

Now, I will share my personal opinion on the use of alcohol and cannabis in PD. I tell my patients that one drink per day may be good for cardiovascular health. We do not have any agent that is confirmed to be neuro-protective in PD, including alcohol and cannabis. If the patient has low standing blood pressure, freezing of gait, or postural instability, I suggest that they avoid alcohol altogether. In PD patients without postural instability freezing or low blood pressure, if the patient or his/her caregivers see that even a small amount of alcohol (half

The risks and benefits of medical marijuana should be weighed carefully. a glass of wine) makes them unsteady, they should avoid alcohol. Driving can be impaired with a much smaller amount of alcohol in PD patients than those without PD.

As for cannabis use, my suggestion is that if there is cognitive impairment, significant depression, or psychosis (hallucinations), cannabis should not be used. There are patients who swear by the beneficial effects of cannabis on anxiety, sleep quality, bladder urgency, dyskinesia, and many other symptoms of PD. I urge my patients who insist on using marijuana, to know their source, to use the smallest amount possible (preferably in the evening only) and not to drive after use until the next day. Again, driving can be impaired with a much smaller amount of cannabis in PD patients than those without PD. They also need to be monitored by their families and caregivers for psychosis, behavioral and cognitive changes. P

Eye Vision Issues

in Parkinson's

DR. ANDREW A. BERMAN DISCUSSES the eye and vision problems that people with Parkinson's disease may experience, what causes these conditions, and how they can be treated.

WHAT IS A NEURO-OPHTHALMOLOGIST?

A neuro-ophthalmologist is either an ophthalmologist or a neurologist who has additional post-residency training in neuro-ophthalmology. Neuroophthalmologists attempt to bridge the gap between the two disciplines by diagnosing and treating the ophthalmic or vision manifestations of neurological disease. As we know, Parkinson's disease (PD) is a neurological disorder caused by the death of dopaminergic neurons in the substantia nigra and therefore depletes dopamine in a part of the brain called the putamen as well as the visual cortex and some cells in the retina. Therefore people with PD may have ophthalmic complaints such as blurred vision, trouble reading, double vision and dry eyes. For these reasons it is the neuro-ophthalmologist who is frequently asked to care for the PD patient.

EYE MOVEMENTS

There are three fundamental types of eye movements; saccadic, pursuit, and vergence. The saccadic eye movements are the rapid eye movements that redirect our gaze to pick up an object of interest. They are also important in following the lines of a printed page. Pursuit eye movements stabilize the object on our retina and follow it as it moves slowly through space. Vergence eye movements serve to move the eyes in different directions (either together, which is convergence, or apart, which is divergence), keeping an image stable on our retina as it moves toward or away from our eyes. This type of eye movement helps us avoid double vision.

In Parkinson's disease, saccadic movements tend to be slow (or hypometric) and show delayed initiation. Some people with PD require a blink to change their saccadic > position (this is called Wilson's sign). As you can imagine, this makes it hard to fixate changing targets in the environment and to read as well. Often these can be normalized with Levodopa, but if a person has Levodopa-induced dyskinesias, the saccadic eye movements can become affected as well.

With proper attention to the particular problems, as well as routine eye care, patients with Parkinson Disease can protect and improve their vision and can enjoy a fine quality of life.

When pursuit movements become decreased, this can produce what is called cog-wheel (jerky) slow eye movements. Insufficient convergence of the eyes can cause insufficiency of accommodation, which is the eye's response to a near stimulus. This inadequacy or slowness of accommodation can result in eyestrain, headaches and double vision (diplopia) when working on near tasks. Unfortunately, this condition can be exacerbated by medications used to treat the tremors and the spasms often seen in PD.

EXTERNAL EYE DISEASE

The blink reflex, which is normally about 16 to 18 times per minute, may decrease to 1 to 2 times per minute in Parkinson's. This causes the eye surface to become dry in a setting of already reduced and abnormal tear film production, creating a condition called "dry eyes." Dry eyes can often lead to a sensation of a foreign body in the eye, blurred vision, or itching and burning. Some theorize that this may contribute to excessive blinking and lid spasms, called benign essential blepharospasm. Occasionally, people with PD may experience apraxia of eyelid opening, which is an inability to open the eyes voluntarily. As a result of the dysfunction of the autonomic nervous system, seborrheic blepharitis and dermatitis may occur, which can cause irritation and inflammation of the upper and lower lid. Inflammation of the cornea and ocular surface may also occur. This condition exacerbates the symptoms of dry eyes.

SENSORY DEFICITS

There are dopaminergic receptors in the retina. The dysfunction of these receptors can lead to a loss of contrast sensitivity for some people. There can also be color vision deficits, usually along the blue-yellow axis. If a person experiences hallucinations, visual disturbances may be a contributing factor in addition to medications.

MANAGEMENT

As physicians, we always have to be aware of our patients' medications- their dosages, effects and side effects. A good history of medications is paramount. It is important to know how the person's symptoms are affected by the medication dosages and by their schedule. For instance, a patient may need different types of glasses depending upon where they are in their medication cycle. First and foremost, the management of eye problems requires an accurate and thorough eye examination and correction of refractive errors. Most of the time, when eye movement abnormalities are found, it is best to prescribe one pair of glasses for distance and another for reading in preference to a

Every Step You Take

by Anne E. Beidler

For Peter and his friends with Parkinson's

Every step you take, every move you make, Is harder than it used to be.

Every step you take, every move you make, Makes you wonder, Is it getting worse? What if I fall? Why is it so hard to turn my head?

Every step you take, every move you make, While your foot drags, While your wrists get stiff, While you keep track of all your pills, While your hand shakes more, While you try so hard to speak clearly, but sometimes people can't hear you.

If I had to deal with all the surprises of Parkinson's, I would probably just sit on the sofa all day And watch TV, And complain about the TV, And complain about the weather, And complain about Parkinson's.

But you don't.

Instead, every step you take, every move you make, No matter what, You keep moving. Yoga, dance, and walking, walking, walking. Singing, bicycling, and walking, walking, walking. Working out in the gym, working down in your workshop, and walking, walking, walking.

Every step you take, every move you make, Is beautiful to me. Every step you take, every move you make, Is full of courage.

Thank you, each one of you, for all you do To keep on moving.

bifocal. However, if patients insist on bifocals then a standard "lined" bifocal rather than a progressive bifocal is recommended. For those with convergence insufficiency, prisms in their glasses help to bend light to the proper focal point on the retina when the eyes cannot move properly to accomplish the same thing. This helps with the ocular fatigue and double vision as well.

Although ocular external disease and dry eyes cannot be cured, they can be effectively treated. Management of these disorders usually involves warm, moist compresses, lid scrubs, and at times, medicated ointments. Dry eyes can also be treated with Artificial Tear substitutes in both an eye drop and an ointment form. In some patients, punctal occlusion (blocking the drainage opening) may be done to increase the contact time of the tears with the ocular surface. All of these techniques can go a long way toward making the eyes look and feel better and increase a patient's vision.

People with Parkinson's who have blepharospasm (involuntary spasms of the eyelids) will benefit from injections of botulinum toxin (Botox). Although it is usually repeated every three to four months, it can be very helpful in restoring a patient's ability to function. Those who experience apraxia of lid opening (involuntary closing of the eyes) can use lid crutches or cosmetic lid tape to help keep their eyes open. Although it is difficult to treat the sensory deficits which at times can affect people with PD, sometimes certain tints for lenses can be helpful. Hallucinations may respond to some central nervous system depressants. Finally, in addition to everything already discussed, the person with PD can still get the garden variety ophthalmic diseases. Diseases such as glaucoma, cataracts and macular degeneration must also be properly diagnosed and managed in addition to PD vision issues. With proper attention to the particular problems, as well as routine eye care, patients with Parkinson's disease can protect and improve their vision and can enjoy a fine quality of life. P

What I get from Washington APDA

"Thank you so much for offering [the Ride Repay] program! Of all the things that PD has taken from me, being unable to drive has been one of the most difficult to adjust to. This program has helped me in so many ways and has given me some peace of mind and restored some of the independence I have lost by not driving. I have told doctors and members of a Tai Chi for PD class that I attend about this program. Thanks for all of the wonderful work you do!"
